Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.In the beginning of creation, the Earth was green and still remains green in most parts. Green is natural and signifies fresh and life; anything green has a lot of energy, nutrients, strength and the power of nature is vested in the green color. The importance of green cannot be overemphasized. Ninety nine per cent of the plants on earth cannot survive without the green coloration of their leaves which is majorly responsible for the process of photosynthesis (a process of food productions in plants). When a plant loses its green pigment due to deficiencies of some certain micro or macro elements absent in the system of a plant, it will definitely begin to experience stunted growth and will eventually wither and die. Human beings and all other animals need a green environment to survive; both ruminant and non ruminant animals need the green plants for food and shelter and as a protection against predators. The forest regions of the earth and grassland are a major habitat for all kinds of plants and animals. Green...
