Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: . . . now to go to the schools and begin at the ABC of the work. My twenty-five years of practice ought, in human justice, to count for something. Owing to a supposed inability to pass the state examinations, I am prohibited from going out of my state to do dental work, which I am at liberty to practice anywhere in this state. It appears to me very strange and wholly wrong that a man who is proficient enough in his profession to work in one state should not be able to work in any state. This is digressing a little, but still is a subject that is akin to the other--of providing a way whereby a practitioner of years may get his degree without so much lost time. The idea of giving honorary degrees in the same manner as do other schools is worthy of consideration. A quarter of a century of faithful, continuous work in one line ought to be evidence enough that the person is qualified to receive a degree or to work in any chosen field. The man who has thus labored has without doubt received from his own state some recognition of his worthiness. I have held several offices in our State Dental Society, and very likely have furnished something in the way of instruction, papers for publication, and have devoted additional time and money to some particular branch of the work; have added something to the line of valuable assistants used in...
