I thought you intended running down to see her at the end of a month, observed Mr. Pindar dryly. Oh yes, of course, I forgot--so I am, said Theodoie, looking a little disconcerted. I remember now, I did say so. I trust your memory will serve you better when the month is up, said the rector sharply. Then as though sorry to have spoken sharply, he hooked his arm through the younger man s and tried to discuss pleasantly with him the details of the approaching wedding. Keep an eye on the sweet girl, and let me know at once if she has even a finger-ache, were Theodore s last words to his friend as the train bore him away. A month passed. Theodore wrote every day with unfailing regularity to his fiancee, and sent besides frequent letters to Mr. Pindar. Jndging by his letters, preparations were being made on a large scale for the bride. A billiard-room was being built on to the Manor, with a smoking-room opening out of it, all to please the bride. The stables, also, were being enlarged, and two valuable hunters had been bought and were now waiting, like the bride, to be installed. Veronica did not hunt, but Theodore, having made no inquiries on the point, could not...
